ABOUT THE SPEAKER

Prof. Kyunghak Kim has conducted anthropological fieldwork on Indian communities abroad and South Asian migrants in Korea with a focus on transnational families and caregiving cultures. He has published several articles and books based on his anthropological fieldwork on the Indian diaspora in Fiji, Sydney, and Vancouver. Over the past decade, he has conducted anthropological fieldwork on the Korean community from the former Soviet Union in South Korea, where he has published several articles and books on transnational migration and caregiving cultures. Recently, he is planning to conduct fieldwork based on his interest in transnational aging and inequalities of aging among the later-life migrants in Korea. Currently, he is the director of the Centre for Global Diaspora Studies at Chonnam National University, Korea, and is in charge of the project 'Public Health of Migrants in the Post-Corona Era' funded by the National Research Foundation of Korea (NRF) Humanities and Social Sciences Research Centre.
